Dear Mavericks,

Last week we had our first Knowledge Series Webinar with John Alton: The Three Spheres: East, West and Digital. Go here to see the replay and get John's take on what the West is missing about the Chinese mind.

Key takeaways:

The Chinese mind runs on different "software" than Western thought. Specifically, it is their pictographic language and the concept is Qi that cerates a distinctly different cognitive model… nay, a different reality.

To the Global South, the Chinese represent progress. As the Chinese invest in poor, undeveloped areas they make themselves welcome. Meanwhile, the West is a colonial power that's worn out its welcome. Are Chinese overtures of friendship toward the downtrodden sincere? Hear what John has to say…

Is the Chinese economy really in danger of collapse? The Chinese know how to suffer and are well prepared to endure economic hardship. In fact, they expect it.

The Chinese brass study five foundational texts of Daoism. This reembrace of their traditional spirituality is tied to their future role in the world.

Do they intend to replace the dollar with their own currency as the world reserve? John says yes.

And much, much more…

Obviously, that is just a smattering of the highlights. John covered everything from physics to torsion energy fields… extradimensionality… the effects of the digital paradigm… and the real motivation behind the Belt Road Initiative.

Bottom line: The arc of history now favors the Chinese – and they know it. That was John Alton.

Our next Knowledge Series Webinar will feature a panel including Chris MacIntosh, Alex Krainer, Logan Craft and Matt Piepenburg to talk about how to navigate the rise of BRICS.

Look for a dedicated email next week…

Regards,

Team Mavericks
